"THE FIERCE WHITE LIGHT THAT BEATS UPON A THRONE."

[Special Correspondence ] WASHINGTON, Sept. 26 .- To show that the White House and its inmates and the doings therein and thereabout are constantly under the strong light of public interest and curiosity one has but to mention a trivial incident. A week or so ago Welch, the White House mounted messenger, rode down Pennsylvania avenue on his black horse. There was noth ing unusual about this. That same hand-versation followed the messenger wherever he went. People paused on the sidewalk, pointed to the black charger. The rule is that no man but the private

The fule is not rigidly enforced, but the exceptions are rare. One messenger goes several times a day for the White House mail, and carries letters to the postolice, it being one of the traditions that no mail carrier must set foot within the mansion. Then there are of a patient's sick chamber.

Now we employ seventeen doorkeepers and watchmen to keep the people out."

The last time the president was at the White House he stepped into the assistant secretary's room and stood for a few minutes in front of the mantel gazing at an array of photographs. He gazed long and earnessly at one after another, and finally turned away with the remark:

"My Benny is not the only pretty baby in question,—Washington Herald," tables named after the president have been received at the White House since March 4, and while the president very much appreciates the compliment paid him thereby, his secretaries, who must make formal acknowledgment of the receipt of each and every photograph, think the White House picture gallery already sufficiently stocked with infantile Benjamin Harrisons.

At the executive mansion there is a keen appreciation of the fact that very small incidents often have very great of four or five years. Yet a buzz of conversation followed the messenger wherever he went. People paused on the sidewark, pointed to the black charger on the beads. And what was received at the White House picture against the private is executive mansion there is a keen appreciation of the fact that very small incidents often have very great of feet upon public opinion. Naturally, there is no little timidity among the employee of the royal family; not only to that of the queen and the Prince of Wales, but to every royal duke as well. There are numbers of shops in Kensington which advertise the patronage of the Duke of Cambridge on all the business cards and circulars, and the Princes Louise, who when in town keeps up her establishment at the South Keusington palace, is a still greater card. When once a shop can mount the three feet upon public opinion. Naturally, there is no little timidity among the employee of the white House in the matre of talking about what they see and hear.
